In the midst of a recent press release about Love Thy Neighbor, he states: In addition, the network has ordered four more episodes of Tyler Perry's drama Imut and have not on top of the 16 additional episodes ordered in June. Thus, the total order for Will and do not have up to 36 episodes for its first season . Just wanted other editors options on the subject. - I recalled 22:48, August 23, 2013 (UTC) I also saw these messages and was puzzled by myself. These specific reports appear to contradict OWN's reports. If you watch Love Thy Neighbor advertising before the show's 8/21/13 episodes, you'll see Tyler Perry declaring for himself that Love Thy Neighbor is airing his season finale on this assuming that the episodes for January 2014, except for season two. Two. that just seems logical as the 50 episode of the first season is weird. To support this, we might consider using websites that are sucking up Love Thy Neighbor as having a season finale this week, such as here, given that this is what OWN's own commercials have stated. AmericanDad86 (speak) 23:01, 23 August 2013 (UTC)Although they are all considered season 1 eoisodes, I believe that perhaps it was split it in half and made it in the second season, because at the beginning of the second season, the opening sequence was changed yboo (speak) 04:52, June 24, 2016 (UTC), maybe I'm too sensitive, but seeing as the show is not about race , we can not just understand with the markings shows the color of the skin cast?? It's 2013. We should be able to see that past in this day and age. This makes Wikipedia very archaic. 173.60.200.48 (conversation) 02:15, January 8, 2014 (UTC) I think it is remarkable that the cast is so multiracial. The multiracial cast is still quite rare in the show these days, regardless of the year. The shows usually depict either a white family or a black family. The fact that the show focuses equally on both the white and the black family is unique. Except that one of the actors on the show even pointed it out seems to me remarkable. In addition, the race has been brought up several times in the show now. In last night's episode alone, Veronica stated, and I quote: Like this, he has to deal with being a black man in this world. Now he complicates that even more with homosexuality. I don't have it. She also mentioned race in an episode before, telling Jeffrey not to dress a certain way because white people are given to judge blacks who don't look the present. She also picked up the race in a scene with Hannah, telling her: I thought our people in the past were being crazy a long time ago. I don't think you're going to get the memo. AmericanDad86 (speak) 03:27, 9 January 2014 (UTC) I agree that this is a remarkable point that the cast is diverse. I think this is also an important point in terms of trends towards polarization (e.g. white and black), as well as some of the social and historical implications that he quietly argues. In fact, if you really look at the Cryer family, it would be somewhat assumptive to classify the family as white rather than see their many ethics appearing members. Casting directors could easily have chosen actors who looked distinctly white if they wanted to show polar opposites from a racial point of view. Also, referring to the cast as multiracial with a hyperlink to multiracial can be misleading: each of the actors are not multiracial, and the cast is ethnically diverse. I would edit the content to include a proper citation. Below is a project for inclusion that can be removed after production. The cast of the show is racially and ethnically superficial and possibly erroneously, the Cryers and Harringtons, two top class families, could be accordingly contrasted as a Caucasian American and an African American. Polar models are suitable. However, the wealth in the krayer family's diversity includes Jim Cryer, who is Caucasian (of European descent) and references as white on the show, and Katherine Cryer, who appears to have mixed heritage to include Caucasian (white) and African (black) ancestry, regardless of ethnicity of Renee Lawless, who plays Katherine Cryer. Katherine Cryer's ethnicity is not emphasized on the show, but to the extent her appearance, she is a multiracial mixed African-American heritage. When selecting a presumptonal cast, there are definitive phenotypic differences between Katherine Cryer and cast members such as Maggie Day or Jim Cryer that distinctly look Caucasian.Such racial or ethnic identification among the ethnically diverse cast also has historical, social and design implications. With the show going to the south, the character, Katherine Cryer, may be Redbone, which depicts ethnicity; and the term is also used to describe an African-American person with a light, almost white complexion. The staging of the show in the South implies a southern history of racial mixing that began during slavery, and exposes its audience to certain historical perceptions of people of African descent who may have chosen to pass as white Caucasians to exercise different freedoms and provide higher socio-economic positions or avoid the negative consequences of a single fall-rule and hypodems. On the other hand, it also indicates that a Caucasian may not be necessary meaning that a person is not without an ethnic mix or even a trace of the African blood line. The cast is diverse in terms of the inclusion of racial minorities and other ethnic groups; however, the predominant cast is African-American or African American. On the list of actors and characters, at least 70% of the characters who play the title role in the series are clearly, phenotypically African, African-American or black. Katherine Cryer is an ethnic bridge and a racial flyover, even as a social construct between all the featured families. Hence, given the prevailing ethnic composition surrounding the cast and race as a social construct, as well as the historical conditions in the south and the overtones of socioeconomic gain integrated into the show, the statement that Katherine Cryer is white only leave the insinuation of persons of mixed heritage and African descent inadvertently or intentionally passing as white, based on her ethnic appearance. If Katherine Cryer did have African heritage as she appears, then the ethnic diversity cast would spread the rich ethnic manifestation of African descent: at least 85% of the cast would be of African descent. Diversity of cast And further: Jim and Katherine Cryer's daughter, Amanda Cryer, for example, has a multi-ethnic appearance and therefore portrays a multiracial man of predominant Caucasian descent who has acquired African ancestry from her Katherine Cryer. Then a less economically wealthy family, a young family, is African-American. In addition, Celine Gonzalez, the mother of the children, unclaimed Jim Cryer, who was paid more than $200,000 a year to work as a maid for the Krayer family and keep quiet about all the familiar affairs in the Family Cryer is Hispanic. Speaking of the show, Jim Cryer seems to have a strong affinity and pattern toward relationships with women of color (who are of African or Latino descent) to include Candice Young, Jennifer Salison, Celine Gonzalez, and Katherine Cryer, but it seems just like women of the indiscriminate race. ThomasVBrown (speak) 18:15, 4 November 2018 (UTC)Episode guide on the official website OWN reports that there is no second season yet. It lists the episode, which aired Tuesday as S01E17. Should I update the article? - Remembered 17:30, January 10, 2014 (UTC) I don't see anything about the seasons on the link you provided. I don't see 'SO1.' Can you direct me to where exactly this quote is on the link you provided. All I see on the link is how far the last episode of Episode 117: Black Sedan and Aired: 01/07/2014. Nothing about the seasons is mentioned. AmericanDad86 (speak) 00:34, 11 January 2014 (UTC)Was it really necessary to remove the details of the characters? Details and information about the characters have been removed and replaced with a timeline table. But it makes sense to keep both the time table and the details of the characters, as in other articles of the characters. It must be returned.
