Netflix series to binge watch with your boyfriend

Being written together is great. You love exactly the same pizza toppings, cat GIFs and punk bands. But somehow, when it comes to TV, if you love a show, they despise it, and vice versa. The cure for TV controversy? A comprehensive list of the best Netflix shows for couples who happen to have different TV flavors. Netflix should never mean arguments, and there are plenty of shows that, for whatever reason, cross the boundaries of the genre and want you crazy kids to happen in 12 hours straight at a marathon viewing session on a rainy Sunday afternoon. Just make sure you stock up on snacks to go with the marathon session of the best shows for couples. Once you get started with some of the following, it becomes a chore to tear you off the screen to hammer on Ben n' Jerry's. Same for any urgent tasks that you need to get done: call your mother, take the trash out, make sweet, sweet love. Disconnect your phone, have the pillow designed, and consider calling in sick over the next few days. Let the harmonious TV watching/cuddling time with your loved one begin. This is going to be so fun that you might consider staying this summer and just working your way through these best shows on Netflix for couples.

Netflix US & Canada on YouTubeThe Guardian called this show terrifyingly addictive and it's an understatement. Made over the course of 10 years, this epic documentary series focuses on Steven Avery's captivating story of free-for-all and imprisonment. It is ideal for fans of True Detective, the podcast Serial, and has become a true crime must-see show. Challenge your different taste on TV than the special person to endure this incredible true crime series. It may look like a children's show, but this animated cult classic touches on very adult themes: addiction, fame, family and mental health. Comic book horse BoJack Horseman (with the voice of Will Arnett) had a hit show in the 90s called Horsin' Around, but he struggles to make a comeback in Hollywood in the modern era. The results are both fun and self-debilitating. BoJack Horseman manages to be funny and sad at once, so if you like dramas, you're ready, whereas if your partner prefers comedy, they'll love it too. More than just being one of the best Netflix series for couples, BoJack Horseman stands as one of the best Netflix series, period. Dev (Aziz Ansari) is an actor who loves pasta and is not quite sure about the direction of his life and relationships. Viewers follow him with his many misadventures of being single and in a relationship, while shopping, auditioning, and just asking the questions most millennials have asked themselves about life in the 2010s. The humor is witty and the drama is poignant, so this series is great for both drama and comedy fan.

Netflix USA and Canada on YouTubeCould any person on this planet not enjoy the Duffer Brothers love letter to 80s pop culture? Seems unlikely, because if you are in or just supernatural into old Spielberg movies, Stranger Things has that box ticked. The series follows the inhabitants of Hawkins, Indiana, who have had several face-offs with the supernatural creatures of the mysterious Upside Down. But don't worry, the children of Hawkins (and some of the parents) seem to always be able to save the day in time. The show features a mix of pre-teen and teen hijinks with supernatural elements that should appeal to everyone. Jason Bateman, Will Arnett, Portia de Rossi and Michael Cera all collaborate on one of the TV show's smartest comedies – and it's so beloved that it was even recently revived on Netflix. The series follows the wealthy Bluth family after the patriarch is arrested and their belongings frozen. Just try not to laugh at this show's humor. Come on, try. You will definitely recognize several of the shows iconic lines, as they have become mainstays of pop culture. After all, there is always money in the banana rack. Aside from the wonderfully pitiful name, Schitt's Creek is a winner of a show in many senses of the term. It has incredible writing, some truly iconic characters (played by comedic heavy hitters like Eugene Levy and Catherine O'Hara), and a crazy story that should satisfy anyone who is even remotely into comedy. — Jessica Lachena

Netflix USA and Canada on YouTubeNarcos focused on the life of Pablo Escobar for the first three seasons, and then gave the sequel Narcos: Mexico as season 4. This series is so addictive to see that you're going to skip a few nights of sleep to get through it in the shortest possible time. It's perfect for a couple who spend their time fighting whether to watch true crime or Keeping Up With The Kardashians. If you're not into Marvel, don't despair. Yes, the show stars Krysten Ritter as hero Jessica Jones and there's definitely some ass-kicking superhero type thing in the show for action fans. However, the series also pairs these action hero plots with a genuinely nuanced, complex portrayal of a feminist survivor who wants to see more complicated women on screen. Whether you like the British royal family or not, you will definitely want to marathon this series after just one episode. The Crown follows Queen Elizabeth (played by Claire Foy and later Olivia Colman) and the British royals over the years. Written by Peter Morgan (the man behind 2006's Oscar-winning The Queen) and rumoured to have cost 100 million pounds to do, this puts the showstopping in show. Charlie Brooker's sci-fi-inspired series isn't quite like anything else on TV. Unlike most sci-fi, it's not about realities far removed from ours, but it's rooted in the possible. Since the episodes focus on real issues that affect so many people, it's hard not to be fascinated by the show. There's also an anthology series, which means each episode has a different cast and a varying tone – so if you and your SO don't like an episode, it's enough others to try to see if find one you both like.

11'Black Mirror: Bandersnatch'It is considered a Netflix interactive movie, but there is also a separate entry in the Black Mirror series that you and your SO can play together. You lead 80s computer programmer Stefan (Fionn Whitehead) through a dark and winding path regarding his future career, free will and the livelihood of his father and colleagues - it's all up to you. That's right, you're making all his choices for him through Netflix. You are your SO can continue to play if you are not satisfied with how it ends, because there are several endings you can get by making different decisions. The final season of The Good Place is upon us, but that doesn't mean it's too late to catch up. All three seasons are available for marathons on Netflix. The series follows Eleanor, Chidi, Tahani and Jason Mendoza as they find out where they belong in the universe after they died. You and your love can think about life, death, the good place, the bad place, Medium Place and Janet while watching together.

13'1 Am Not Okay With This'This series is a bit as if sixteen candles collided with Carrie - two good stories that go well together. It's a really wild coming-of-age series that manages to undermine and play with some of the classic tropes that run rampant over all sorts of similar stories. Not only does this queer romance have, but it also has some freaky sci-fi twists. At times it can feel a bit Stephen King (thanks in part to it stars Sophia Lillis and Wyatt Oleff reuniting as serial performers), and that's certainly a good thing. Be warned: it's not the longest entry in our list of our best Netflix shows for couples, but it's a quality one.

Tom and I used to watch TV together often before we got married and got the boys. Now that our time is #adulging, our time spent cuddling in front of the tube has definitely diminished. We plow down on the couch about once or twice a week to see something. While I love shows like Grey's Anatomy, Scandal and Nashville, it's not exactly something I could put on for Tom and I to watch together. I put together a list of 20 shows that are great to see with your husband. Some of these are our favorites, and some are still on our list to watch. Now that have a list to get started... it is up to you to decide whether to cheat. Sneak Sneak a snack after 9pm Help the children with their school projects. Googling answers to family games night. We've all cheated. In fact, 46% of viewers are cheating right now - with their favorite Netflix show. And it's not just parents who are guilty of the crime, cheaters come in all sizes, so even the little ones can't be trusted. If you decide to cheat, that's fine. Just be warned: cheating is okay, don't destroy it! Keep some of your cheats to yourself and don't let in that you know something new! This entry was written in partnership with Netflix as part of stream team. All opinions are my own. Own.
